NEUROETHICS/BIOETHICS/SCIENCE, LAW & POLICY POST-DOCTORAL FELLOWSHIP

We seek a highly motivated and collaborative postdoctoral scholar to join an interdisciplinary Laboratory (the Farahany Science, Law, and Policy Laboratory - SLAP Lab), which conducts research on ethical issues in the development of novel neurotechnologies, virtual reality, and artificial intelligence, at Duke University, led by Nita Farahany, JD, PhD, in the Duke Initiative for Science & Society and Duke Law School.

The postdoctoral fellow will serve as the lab manager for SLAP Lab. They will conduct qualitative and quantitative research (including surveys, interviews, and focus groups) with the public, researchers, and representatives from industry engaged in the development of new consumer-based and research-based technologies. The fellow will analyze these data to prepare manuscripts and presentations for national and international meetings. This work will be embedded in SLAP Lab with a vertically-integrated team of collaborators. The fellow will be encouraged to take advantage of other training and learning opportunities within the Duke Initiative for Science and Society and Duke University Community. We hope that this experience will prepare the fellow for an independent research career in bioethics/neuroethics, science policy, and/or legal academia.

Required Qualifications
- A doctoral degree or equivalent in behavioral or social sciences (including psychology, sociology, neuroscience, or STS), or related fields (including law, health policy, science policy)
